1. Tables of Organization and Equipment in Soviet Army units were of three categories, according to the strategic importance of the area (main line of defense, front line of defense, reserve area); they were known, in that order, as T/O & E "A", "B", and "V" (Cyrillic letters). As examples,

50X1

a. T/O & E "A": White Russian (Belorusskiy) and Maritime (Primorskiy) military districts were considered as main line of defense areas.

b. T/O & E "B": Carpathian and Kiev military districts and the GOFG were considered as front line defense areas.

2. The 1787th Army Motor Transport and Tractor Spare Parts Dump had a "B" class T/O & E, since GOFG was considered a front line defense area.
